INDONESIA
PROGRAM SUPPORT INITIATIVE (PSI)
Semi-Annual Performance Report
June 1 to November 30, 2003

I. Introduction and Major Achievements

Through the Program Support Initiative (PSI), DAI provides high-quality grant implementation and management support to the USAID Office of Conflict Prevention and Response (OCPR) in Indonesia and East Timor. The PSI contract facilitates a continuation of activities implemented under the SWIFT project (AOT-I-01-98-00199-00), which lasted three years and ended on May 31, 2002.

Events in Indonesia over the past six months tested DAI's ability to design and implement initiatives that mitigate crisis and provide relief. In the second half of 2003, we worked with USAID/OCPR on a range of issues, including responses to terrorist bombings and to the unraveling of the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement in Aceh. Addressing these events reinforced our belief that timing is crucial and that urgent operations must take advantage of short-lived opportunities. At the same time, our work highlighted the importance of partnerships with civil society organizations and demonstrated that strengthening these groups is an effective way to reduce the risk of conflict and build foundations for peace.

The political environment changed frequently and dramatically during the reporting period. As the country struggled to return to normalcy in the months after the bombing in Bali and as protesters against the war in Iraq moved off the streets, the tentative peace in Aceh unraveled and the Government declared martial law in the troubled province. Then, as the nation came to grips with the changing dynamic in Aceh, terrorists detonated a powerful bomb in Jakarta. This event, occurring against the backdrop of the Bali bombing, the war in the Middle East, fears of a growing Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) epidemic, and a sharp downturn in the economy, reopened debate in political circles regarding security in the capital and beyond.

Working closely with OCPR, we sought ways to assist Indonesian civil society and the Indonesian government to respond positively to these crises. DAI and OCPR designed and implemented interventions to assist victims of violence and helped build local capacity to manage crisis in the future. Our performance-oriented systems and deep network of local organizations facilitated our quick responses to these and other crises.

Noteworthy achievements during the reporting period include:

- With tensions high, security deteriorating, and foreign organizations facing restricted access, we launched new initiatives in Aceh and Jakarta, shifting our focus from good governance, dialogue, and economic recovery initiatives to humanitarian assistance, human rights protection, and Aceh-related media programs. In the first two months of the military operation, OCPR funded 10 programs valued at $500,000 that have had immediate impact. Media monitoring reports produced in Indonesian and English are used by the national press, analysts and diplomats, providing an independent and alternative source of information to the mainstream media. 'Life support' has allowed key Acehnese civil society organizations to continue activities even though they have been cut off from their regular sources of funding. And aid to a hospital in Aceh has strengthened public health service provision to 179,000 residents of Lhokseumawe.

- Within hours of the Marriott bombing, OCPR/DAI met with local NGOs to assess victim needs and local hospital response. Two days after the blast, the U.S. Ambassador pledged $500,000 to assist victims and their families; within a week we developed a series of interventions valued at nearly $400,000. With OCPR funding, local NGOs quickly delivered $100,000 to 77 of the most-affected families, helping them pay for food, medical care, funerals, and other emergency expenses. Other grant-funded initiatives built an improved capacity in the burns unit at Indonesia's largest hospital, furnished equipment to Red Cross ambulance crews, and provided medical treatment for the most severely injured.
- In an unfavorable environment, civil-military relations programs targeted critical support to civil society groups working for military reform. Using a nuanced approach to create incentives for continuing discourse on military reform, we supported partner organizations working on civilian-military legislative issues, monitoring of trials against military officers, and advocating for transparency of the military budget. These initiatives helped to consolidate progress made in reforming the military, and assisted civil society and some segments in the political elite in countering anti-reformist tendencies in Indonesia. Our grants helped reform-minded groups facilitate political engagement and build momentum for the campaign for accountable, transparent and democratic security forces—a precondition for overcoming Indonesia's many conflicts, both locally and nationally.

Accepting measured risks and innovating as the situation demands, we have worked with local actors in responding to crisis and mitigating conflict. Our systems and procedures facilitated prompt and innovative responses to the recent events in Indonesia. We seek to continually learn from our experience and apply lessons learned to situations in the field to assist Indonesians as they deal with a troubled present and build foundations for a more peaceful future.

II. Project Management and Administration

A. Contract Modifications

There were three modifications to the contract during the reporting period.

Modification 5, dated September 28, 2003 revised the paying office for this contract.

Modification 6, dated September 28, 2003:

- Increased the amount obligated from $24,229,047 to $33,842,047, of which $15,705,238 was applied to PSI-Indonesia;
- Realigned the budget to reflect changes made as a result of the incorporation of the new NICRA;
- Incorporated DAI's emergency program dated July 7, 2003 into the contract as a further elaboration of the SOW;
- Changed the name of the Chief of Party from L. Pierce to D. Pottebaum and the name of the CTO from J. Lehman to M. Stievater; and

- Extended the estimated completion date by six months to May 30, 2004 with no increase in estimated cost.

A non-numbered modification, dated 23 October 2003, incorporated the 'Reporting of Foreign Taxes' clause in full text as required in implementing the requirements of Section 579 of the FY2003 Foreign Operations Act.

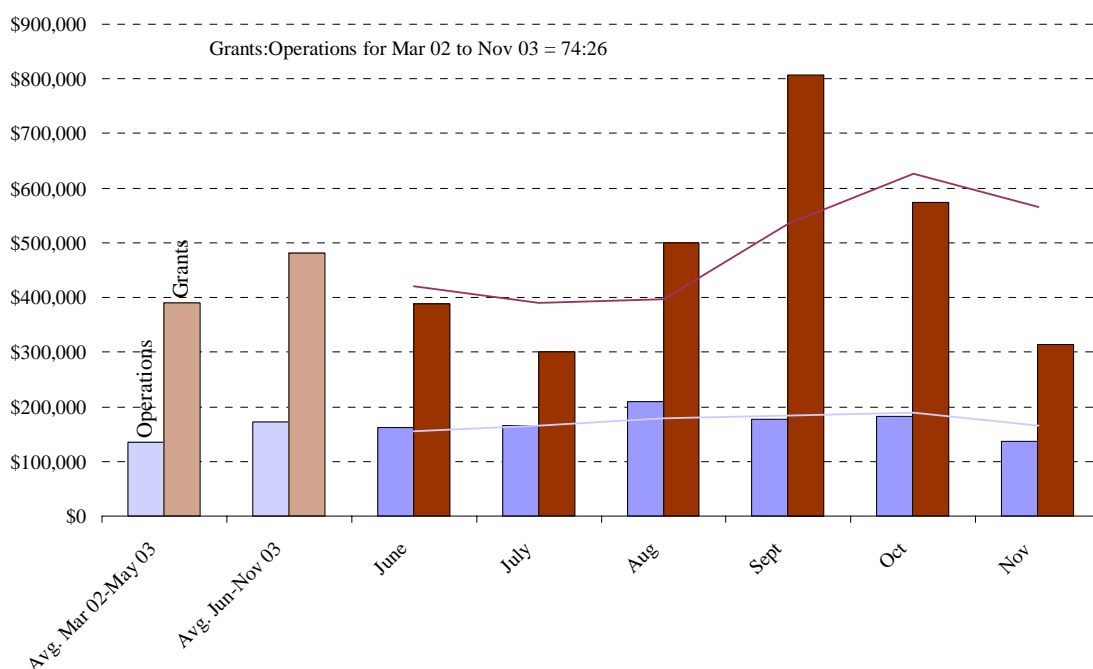

B. Finances

Invoiced expenditures from inception through the end of November 2003 totaled $22,499,662 of the obligated budget of $33,842,047 for activities in Indonesia and East Timor. As of November 30, 2003, total expenditures for the Indonesia program included $3,048,623 in operations costs and $8,741,392 for grants activities.

Figure 1 presents the average operations expenditures and grant disbursements for March 2002 to May 2003 and June to November 2003, and monthly figures for the period June to November 2003. As noted in the figure, average monthly operations costs were more than 25 percent higher during the reporting period than the long-term average. They were high in August and September because of costs associated with the mobilization to Indonesia of the new Chief of Party.

Grant disbursements were also higher than normal during the reporting period, with monthly payments nearly 25 percent higher than long-term average figures. Grant payments increased dramatically in September and October due to activities associated with the response to the bombing of the Marriott Hotel in Jakarta and on-going commitments in Aceh. The grants-to-operations ratio during the reporting period was 74:26 (identical to the ratio for PSI since inception). Please refer to Section III for more details on grant-funded activities during the reporting period.

(data from project vouchers; line indicates three-month trend)

Figures 2 and 3 depict the monthly average value and number of grants approved between March 2002 to May 2003, and June to November 2003, and monthly figures for the reporting period (dollar values based on final disbursements and/or contingent obligation). The monthly average value of grants approved during the reporting period was slightly less than the long-run monthly average. This was due largely to a decline in activities in Aceh and Bali, and because through most of the period the project end date was assumed to be November 30, implying that new grant activities must have an October 30 end date to enable proper closeout of PSI (thus, we were able to fund only activities that had very short implementation periods, and these grants are few in number and tend to have small dollar values; as noted in Section 1 of this report, the end-date of the PSI contract was extended officially on 28 September).

For the same reasons, the average number of grants approved each month was also slightly less than the long-run average. The average grant value was nearly $31,000 during the reporting period, 10 percent greater than the long-run average. Section III presents more details on grant-funded activities during the reporting period.

III. Regional and Thematic Programs

A. Overview

OCPR/DAI awarded 86 grants valued at more than $2.6 million during the reporting period. A large number of Indonesian civil society organizations and international NGOs received grant funds in support of conflict prevention and response initiatives in seven regions and for work on civilian-military relations activities (see Box 1 for list of key partner organizations; additional data is presented in the appendix).

Fifty percent of the value of all grants awarded during the period supported initiatives in Aceh and Bali Provinces (these grants represented 55 percent of total number of grants awarded during the period). Another 16 percent supported the U.S. Government response to the August 5th terrorist bombing of the Marriott Hotel in Jakarta. Nonetheless, as was the case during the first half of 2003, PSI Indonesia was very much focused on just two geographic areas at the end of 2003—Bali and Aceh.

B. Civilian-Military Relations

Effective civilian control over the military, or the lack thereof, remains a crucial focal point in overall OCPR/DAI programs. The level of professionalism and discipline demonstrated by Indonesia's armed forces (TNI) often determines the intensity and duration of a conflict, making structural military reform an important element of conflict resolution. Without reform, the military will remain part of the problem rather than part of a solution to Indonesia's ethnic, religious and secessionist conflicts.

The second half of 2003 saw virtually no progress in this regard. The declaration of military emergency in Aceh on May 19, 2003, gave TNI a free hand for a armed solution to problems in Aceh and marked a de facto moratorium on military reform for the duration of the conflict. Arguing that any experiment with military reform at this stage would weaken TNI's efficiency in Aceh, the civilian political elite has refrained from publicly criticizing the military's conduct in the campaign which by the end of November had already claimed an estimated 1,200 lives. The explosion of a bomb at the Marriott hotel in Jakarta in August further fueled demands for an expanded role for TNI in counter-terrorism and domestic security, undermining efforts to bring the military under stricter control by civilian authorities.

The approaching 2004 elections are arguably the most serious obstacle to military reform. Parliament has not received or deliberated on any of the military reform bills prepared since 2002; even if it had, it is unlikely it would have passed the bills into law before the new Parliament constitutes itself in October 2004. Not only are the 2004 elections increasingly shifting attention from policy-making to short-term bargaining, they also position TNI as a major power broker for the political competitors, further reducing hopes for wide-ranging reform to TNI's organizational structure. In this context, it is of crucial importance to at least keep the issue of military reform on the policy agenda in order to facilitate concrete action after the elections.

Major Program Activities. Despite the difficulties involved in reforming the military, OCPR/DAI remained deeply involved in civilian-military relations activities during the reporting period. We awarded 13 grants during the reporting period with a total value of more than $250,000—10 percent of the value of all grants awarded during the reporting period. This brought our total Civilian-Military Relations portfolio to 71 grants valued at nearly $1 million. PSI focused on four main program areas during the reporting period:

- Legislative reform of the security sector;
- Moving opinion within the government toward a non-violent resolution to the conflict in Aceh;
- Fostering legal accountability of the military by monitoring trials against its personnel; and
- Promoting transparency of the military budget.

(all local organizations)

To support legislative reform of the security sector, OCPR/DAI helped design and fund initiatives by civil society groups to contribute to or conduct public reviews of new government draft legislation. By the end of November 2003, Parliament had not yet received the Armed Forces Bill, drafted in late 2002 with the participation of several OCPR/DAI partner organizations. The military has expressed dissatisfaction with this draft bill and has lobbied for its own version. This resulted in a stalemate, hardened by the sudden illness of MOD Matori Abdul Djalil in August 2003 that left him incapacitated and the drafting process without critical ministerial leadership. Other draft bills prepared by OCPR/DAI grantees, including a bill on military assistance to the police and another on the establishment of the National Security Council, have also experienced delays. The government has been reluctant to appoint a new MOD, and the political climate of the pre-election period makes it unlikely that Parliament will pass any new initiatives before the 2004 elections.

OCPR/DAI also supported initiatives to inform government and public opinion about possible peaceful solutions to the conflict in Aceh. Changing government opinion is never an easy task in the best of circumstances. Doing so at the present juncture has proven to be particularly difficult on Aceh-related issues. For example, in August 2003 USAID sponsored an initiative by a Jakarta think tank to develop a proposal for lifting the military emergency in Aceh, including recommendations for alternative policies. This initiative received conflicting reactions from the Coordinating Security Minister's office. Through such initiatives, OCPR/DAI partners have strengthened their ability to articulate proposals for non-violent solutions in Aceh, providing a counterbalance to widespread public support for military solutions and also providing opportunities for public discussion of the unlikelihood of ever gaining long-term stability in Aceh and throughout Indonesia by means of strictly military approaches.

The behavior of troops during the military offensive in Aceh is an issue of great importance to OCPR/DAI. Since relevant legislation to establish human rights courts in Indonesia was passed in 2000, only two major cases have been brought to court: East Timor and the 1984 massacre of Muslim demonstrators in Tanjung Priok. While the East Timor trials were widely condemned as a farce, they improved towards the end and culminated in the guilty verdict for the highest-ranking commander of the operation, a two-star general. Civil society groups contributed to these improvements through their monitoring efforts, regularly feeding the media, prosecutors, judges and international organizations with material and analysis.

The ongoing Tanjung Priok massacre trials are the second test case for the human rights legislation, and their outcome will affect the way Indonesian security forces will conduct their operations in the future. Serious sentences will be an important deterrence to further violations in the field, while light verdicts will likely further erode the legal accountability of Indonesia's security apparatus. OCPR/DAI worked with local partners to monitor the trials since the beginning of the East Timor proceedings and will continue to do so until the Tanjung Priok trials close.

Increasing the transparency of the armed forces budget was the final area of focus during the reporting period. The TNI practice of raising funds through military-owned enterprises, the protection of businesses, and illegal operations such as logging, prostitution and gambling creates a serious obstacle to effective civilian control of the military. OCPR/DAI funded a series of workshops involving civil society organizations and relevant government departments to discuss issues of military financing, including discussions on the military operation in Aceh.

Overall Impact. The overall impact of OCPR/DAI's civil-military relations programs has to be appraised against the background of an increasingly difficult macro-political context. Unlike in 2000 and 2001, when the civilian elite and the wider public were in favor of substantial military reform, the current political momentum is against military reform. Stability, rather than reform, is in the hearts and minds of Indonesians. The war in Aceh, the need for tightened security after the Bali and Marriott bombings, as well as the dissatisfaction with civilian state institutions and political parties have made it difficult to launch campaigns for military reform. According to new and credible polls, 58 percent of Indonesian citizens favor a return to the stability of Soeharto's New Order. It remains to be seen whether this attitude will endure beyond the memory of recent shocks to security. But for the moment, promoting democratic change within the armed forces is not a popular priority.

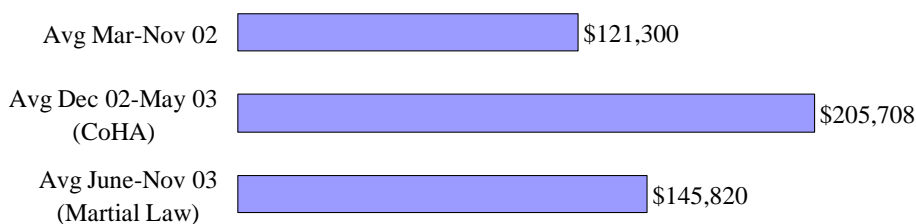

Given these complex circumstances, the focus of civil-military relations programs has shifted from supporting already existing political processes to backing up groups in political society that understand the critical need for military reform. By creating incentives for continuing discourse on military reform, we hope that progressive actors will be in position to push for reform when the environment becomes more favorable, perhaps after the 2004 elections. In the meantime, we plan to continue to support partners working on legislative initiatives, monitoring trials against military officers, and facilitating debate on transparency of the military budget. Activities supported by OCPR/DAI helped reform-minded groups and individuals continue the campaign for accountable, transparent and responsive security forces—a precondition for overcoming Indonesia's many conflicts, both locally and nationally.

C. Aceh

Despite the imposition of martial law during the reporting period, OCPR remained involved in Aceh, supporting new and innovative responses. The value of grants awarded during this period averaged $145,820 per month, more than in the period preceding the Cessation of Hostilities phase (March to November 2002) and only slightly lower than during the CoHA period itself (December 2002 to May 2003). During this period, OCPR/DAI funded a total of 25 new activities valued at nearly $900,000—33 percent of the value of all grants awarded during the reporting period. This brought our total Aceh portfolio to 92 grants valued at more than $3.2 million, critical support for a range of conflict mitigation and recovery activities conducted by local and international NGOs.

(final disbursement value/contingent obligation)

Major Program Activities and Impact. The resumption of hostilities led OCPR/DAI to effectively end support for the HDC in Banda Aceh by the start of this reporting period. OCPR/DAI also suspended a number of ongoing quick-impact initiatives that aimed to stimulate economic recovery at the grassroots level due to severe limitations in access and security. Opportunities for intervention by international donors and NGOs in Aceh itself were few indeed. Under martial law, the Government of Indonesia (GoI) effectively ended access to the province for international organizations, including those wishing to provide direct humanitarian assistance. OCPR/DAI remained in regular contact with groups like UN/OCHA, ICRC, IMC and OFDA to improve our understanding of changing government regulations on access.

Dramatic changes in Aceh since May 2003 have made it nearly impossible for donors to remain active in the province and have significantly increased the challenges faced in trying to mitigate conflict in the province. OCPR/DAI has provided leadership within the donor community through the design and funding of numerous new initiatives in both Aceh and Jakarta. During the reporting period, we supported activities aimed at safeguarding human rights and civil society activists, IDP-related initiatives, and activities to ease the suffering of ordinary Acehnese. We placed particular focus on monitoring events in Aceh through Jakarta-based programs in the fields of media, policymaking and human rights. Grant-funded activities initiated during the reporting period include:

- A media monitoring program by the Jakarta-based Institute for Free-Flow of Information (ISAI) that monitors and advocates press freedom and objectivity in the national media's coverage of the conflict in Aceh. ISAI's biweekly 'Aceh News Watch' is regularly used for internal evaluation by some of the largest TV stations and newspapers in Indonesia. So far, eight comprehensive biweekly reports have been produced (2,500 copies each) in Indonesian and English that summarize program findings and provide a crucial 'report card' for media outlets and their editors. The national press has regularly covered program findings and related workshops.
- An innovative website, Acehkita.com, covering the humanitarian plight of Acehnese during martial law, provides an independent and alternative source of information to the mainstream media. It is a common source of independent information on Aceh for journalists, analysts, diplomats and NGOs.

- Emergency assistance to IDPs, provided through key NGO partners like CARDI and IMC, including water sanitation and emergency medical kits, and primary medical services in conflict-affected areas.
- ‘Life support’—mostly in the form of small equipment grants—to Acehese NGOs, such as YPHAM and MISPI, that have been cut-off from their regular sources of funding.
- Hospital equipment support in North Aceh—a region hit hard during the conflict—through the Indonesian Red Cross (PMI). This public hospital serves the 179,000 residents of Lhokseumawe, and provides subsidized outpatient and inpatient care in an area where medical services are normally overburdened.
- A program by ICMC to build the capacity of ‘exiled’ Acehese civil society leaders in Jakarta to advocate for a peaceful solution to the conflict. More than 45 civil society leaders and 14 different Aceh-based NGOs have benefited from this program.
- A comprehensive review and policy paper by the Jakarta-based PROPATRIA think tank on GoI policies associated with the military operation and advocacy to the GoI on an exit strategy.

Box 3: Key Aceh Program Partners in 2003
(top funding/grant award recipients)

Local Organizations:

- Cetro (2 grants, value $119,965)
- ISAI (2 grants, value $101,734)
- LAPLA (3 grants, value $84,139)

International Organizations:

- ICMC (5 grants, value $391,739)
- CARDI (3 grants, value $278,489)
- HDC (4 grants, $178,450)

A number of new activities are under development. OCPR/DAI is considering IMC and ICMC proposals to assist IDPs in North Sumatra; a PMI program to revitalize local health clinics across North and East Aceh; human rights monitoring programs; training for investigative journalists; initiatives to monitoring trials of suspected GAM members; and bridge support for USAID/DG Office activities on the 2004 general elections in Aceh.

The OCPR/DAI Aceh program continues to situate USAID at the forefront of conflict resolution and mitigation efforts in Aceh. In small but significant ways, OCPR/DAI-funded activities during this reporting period have had a clear and positive impact: helping to support and sustain Aceh's civil society leadership; monitoring and reporting on the humanitarian plight of ordinary Acehese under martial law; constructively advocating a non-military solution to the conflict; and strengthening medical institutions and emergency-response capacity in Aceh. Importantly, OCPR/DAI-funded initiatives have created greater public awareness—locally and nationally—for human rights, independent information on events in the province, and the importance of pursuing a peaceful resolution to Aceh's conflict.

D. Bali

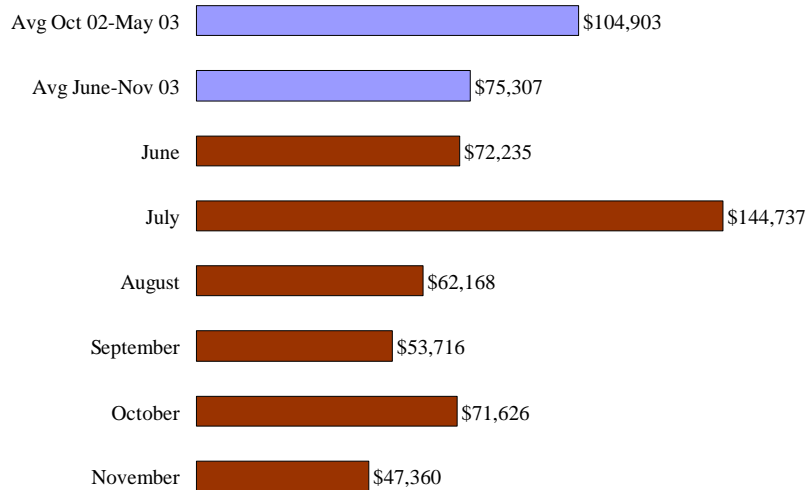

The people of Bali and the Balinese economy continued to suffer from the downturn in tourist arrivals during the reporting period. A quick recovery seems unlikely given the on-going conflict in the Middle East, the persistence across Asia of SARS, and the impact of the Marriott bombing on travel and business in Indonesia.

During the reporting period, OCPR/DAI funded 22 new activities valued at more than $450,000 in Bali. This brought our total programming response to 59 grants valued at nearly $1.5 million. These funds provided critical support to a range of emergency response and social and economic development projects implemented by local and international NGOs.

E. Jakarta—Marriott Bombing

In the hours after the Marriott bombing, OCPR/DAI worked with local NGOs to assess victim needs and local hospital response, the Red Cross, Marriott International, and other organizations. Based on this information, we helped formulate a framework of assistance to guide U.S. Embassy decision making. Two days after the blast, the U.S. Ambassador pledged $500,000 to assist victims and their families.

Through internal meetings and discussions with local partners, we then developed a series of interventions valued at nearly $400,000, funding for which was delivered to partner organizations by the U.S. Ambassador in a public ceremony a week after the bombing. With OCPR funding, local NGOs quickly delivered $100,000 to 77 of the most-affected families, helping them pay for food, medical care, funerals, and other emergency expenses. Other grant-funded initiatives built an improved capacity in the burns unit at Indonesia's largest hospital, furnished equipment to Red Cross ambulance crews and provided medical treatment for the most severely injured. The total value of these 8 initiatives is 16 percent of the value of all grants awarded during the reporting period.

F. Maluku

During the reporting period, OCPR/DAI funded 11 new activities valued at more than $340,000 in Maluku (13 percent of the value of all PSI grants awarded during the reporting period). This brought our total portfolio in Maluku to 35 grants valued at nearly $1.3 million. These funds provided critical support to a range of conflict mitigation projects implemented by local and international NGOs.

Activities funded by OCPR/DAI during the reporting period include (the appendix presents additional information on grant-funded activities in Maluku):

- Peacebuilding and reconciliation initiatives implemented by YPPM, YPM, Baku Bae Joint Committee and IBI;
- Economic recovery and mapping projects implemented by YNB, Baku Bae Joint Committee and YPLPMK;
- Village leadership and community capacity building events implemented MOCDA and LPPM; and
- Health activities implemented by CARDI and IBI.

G. Papua—Looking to the Future

OCPR/DAI awarded only 4 new grants for activities in Papua during the reporting period. The small number of grant awards does not imply a reduced focus on this province. On the contrary, we spent significant staff time during the reporting period taking a fresh look at the political, economic and social environment in Papua, investigating opportunities and discussing options we might pursue in the future. We present a summary of our findings and recommendations in the following pages.

Background. Papua underwent tumultuous changes during second half of 2003. The political fallout from Jakarta's controversial plan to split the province into three has increased social and political tensions and undermined the province's Special Autonomy package. With Papua's fate now clearly concentrated in Jakarta political circles, OCPR/DAI decreased grant-funded activities in the province and spent more resources on monitoring and assessment of the current situation. This approach will help ensure that future interventions effectively respond to a rapidly changing political environment.

During November 2-16, 2003, OCPR/DAI staff visited the capitals of the three proposed provinces—Timika, Jayapura and Manokwari—and met with local politicians, legislators, police, religious and tribal leaders, NGOs, gender activists, newspaper editors, academics, and ordinary Papuans such as fishermen, students and farmers. Discussions with this transect of Papuan society generated a very worrying picture regarding the potential for conflict in Papua, particularly in the short term.

Presidential Instruction No.1/2003, issued in January last year, called for the accelerated implementation of Law 45/1999 on Papua's division (known as pemekaran) into three provinces—Central Irian Jaya, West Irian Jaya, and Irian Jaya. This contradicts the Special Autonomy law passed by parliament in November 2001 that regarded Papua as a single territorial unit and stipulated that the (not yet established) 'Papuan People's Assembly', or MRP, designate any new districts or provinces. As a result, the Instruction is a source of much anger and frustration for many Papuans. It was a slap in the face to moderate Papuan leaders for whom Special Autonomy was not just an alternative to the dangerous game of advocating independence, but a chance to reinforce Papuan cultural institutions and address their people's historical, economic and cultural grievances.

An overwhelming number of religious and tribal leaders, academics, NGOs and Papuan politicians across the province are outspoken critics of pemekaran. The central government and its supporters in Papua, however, seem determined to forge ahead anyway. On November 14, 2003, the Ministry of Interior inaugurated a new Governor of 'West Irian Jaya Province', effectively signaling the official split of Papua.

Advocates of pemekaran maintain that in a 28-district province far too vast for a single administration to govern, the split will deliver economic development to the people more directly. In reality, the latest changes to the province's status have far more to do with fear that through Special Autonomy Papua could break loose from the unitary state.

Local elites in Papua are essentially pawns in the bigger scheme of things. Indeed, since the pemekaran initiative resurfaced in January, relations among key Papuan leaders have grown tense, and two main camps have emerged: (a) those that support pemekaran and often seek personal or district gains from it, and (b) those that oppose it and demand implementation of Special Autonomy. A third group of pro-independence leaders continues to fight for a separate state.

With seemingly nobody on the ground to mediate between the deeply divided camps, social and political tensions have increased considerably in recent months and look set to lead to violent conflict both between Jakarta and Papuans, and among Papua's ethnically divided populace. The promise of self-government in newly carved provinces has meanwhile generated new expectations, particularly in Manokwari, the capital of 'West Irian Jaya' Province. The Ministry of Interior has shelved for now plans to create a 'Central Irian Jaya' Province, mostly due to deadly clashes in August 2003 in Timika between supporters and opponents of the split.

Program Strategy. OCPR/DAI will continue to evaluate the situation in Papua and search for opportunities for meaningful, effective interventions based on the following recommendations:

The key challenge is to influence policy decisions made in Jakarta

Strategies and actions must recognize that the fate of Papua is being determined in Jakarta. Trying to affect policy from within the province would mostly be fruitless. Potentially useful initiatives, largely centered in Jakarta, include:

- Illicit public opinion or increase public awareness of the issues affecting Papua's future;
- Increase media coverage of the debate surrounding the provincial split, Special Autonomy and corruption in resource use;
- Increase participation by Papuan groups in drafting and reviewing legislation; and
- Support advocacy by Papuans to central government about implications of Papua legislation and policy.

Conflict prevention & mitigation in Papua should be encouraged and supported

A focus on Jakarta-based initiatives does not imply a lack of necessity for initiatives within Papua. The potential for increased tension and violent conflict in Papua is very real, and we should fund well-planned and targeted conflict prevention and mitigation activities. Much of the resentment felt by even moderate Papuans toward government policy stems from what many cite as a lack of 'socialization'. Encouraging open discussion and creating release valves for tensions caused by and grievances surrounding pemekaran and Special Autonomy represent possible actions that can reduce tension and prevent conflict between the Papuan public and government, and between various groups within Papuan society. Others include:

- Regular mediated discussions between the different political, tribal and social groups on recent political developments; and
- Formal, public mechanisms through which to express opinions and debate.

Mechanisms to vent frustration and discontent are sorely lacking in Papua today, so that the debate over crucial political issues is currently marked by paranoia, fear, intimidation and stigmatization rather than participatory, constructive discussion. Activities that aim to mitigate tension and conflict are also critical. Possible interventions include:

- Strengthen the capacity of local organizations and public institutions that are well placed to mitigate conflict and that work across tribal, ethnic, religious and political groups; and
- Identify potential ‘mediators’ within the different religious and tribal communities, and within different conflict-prone towns and cities, who can act to mitigate conflict if and when it occurs.

Human rights must be monitored

Support for the monitoring of human rights in Papua is also critical. The U.S. provides much needed leadership in this field, with other donor countries following suit. With the TNI seemingly poised to increase its role and tighten its grip on Papua, an increase in human rights violations might occur. While donor actions rarely prevent abuses from happening, supporting those who can ‘bear witness’ remains important and can serve as a deterrent to perpetrators.

The complexity of this situation demands a strategic approach for engagement

A strategic and integrated approach is necessary to ensure maximum potential impact and ensure that we do not dilute our resources among too many unrelated actors, over too large an area, or over too wide a time gap.

It is important to keep in mind that given the resources at stake, and the power of the various actors involved, that it will not be easy to affect the current situation on Papua. Indeed, achieving such impact is likely well beyond the capacity of any donor organization. This is due to the strong determination and all-pervasive role of the central government in deciding Papua’s ultimate political arrangements, and the realization that these ultimate political arrangements are the key for ‘resolving’ Papua’s ongoing conflict. This implies that OCPR/DAI might consider a coordinated approach among donors, as has been accomplished in Aceh.

IV. Future Challenges

Formulating and implementing new and innovative activities to monitor and mitigate the conflict in Aceh and keeping abreast of events and opportunities in other regions will be important implementation challenges in the next six months. Designing a primary school rehabilitation program in Bali and putting the program into operation will also be a challenge. With the PSI contract drawing to a close, however, the most significant challenge we will face in the coming six months is assessing the overall impact of grant-funded initiatives we have supported since 2002 and drawing lessons from our experience that will be useful to OCPR and to USAID operations in other countries.

DAI recognizes the importance of assessing impact and, for PSI, we are designing a methodology that will take us beyond ad hoc approaches to more systematic discussion and measurement of progress and impact. The steps in the design and implementation of this 'lessons learned exercise' include:

- discussion among senior staff of the background of our project, its goal, purpose, outputs and inputs;
- design of indicators useful in measuring progress in obtaining program outputs and in gauging the impact of our actions;
- construction of databases to facilitate storage and analysis of quantitative and qualitative data;
- selection of a cross-section of grant-funded activities to review; and
- scheduling of field visits to discuss our interventions with partners and key stakeholders.

We plan to complete these steps by January 2004. Field visits are scheduled to begin in February and continue through the end of April 2004. We will hold meetings periodically, as we complete field visits, to discuss findings, determine lessons learned and best practices and how we might incorporate them into new strategies and activities. We plan to complete documentation of key lessons learned and best practices by the end of May.

Our plans for this exercise are ambitious, highlighting the importance we place on drawing lessons from our experience in Indonesia. We believe that we must learn from our conflict mitigation and response programs, and that the basis of this learning should be as broad and as systematic as possible. We hope that the results of this exercise will be useful to OCPR as they develop program policies and strategies for 2004 and beyond.
